Emotional Detachment: Thread #1

If you find that you don't get offended in an interactive situation where otherwise 99% of the people would, there's a good chance that you have extreme emotional detachment.

If there is no internal ego triggered, you can control your offending counterpart in many ways.

Most interactions go sour because one person says something that offends in one way or another. May be subtle, may be rash.

Most people react. Some don't but still internalize it.

Very Few stay completely detached.

Practice remaining neutral (internally and expressively) to offensive remarks.

To the point where you welcome it.

The idea is not for you to fail in distinguishing between rude/polite people.

But its for people to realize that nothing triggers a reaction out of you.

No one expects zero reaction.

It creates imbalance.

People who try to trigger others with comments or their behavior, use it for control.

When you don't react, you immediately create leverage.

The leverage is:

They can't control you & they suddenly feel controlled by you.

Whatever the offending remark was, it was used to attain a result.

If the result was to throw you off, then you already won.

If it was to get something, do not adjust your behavior because of this insult.

They tried to offend to get a discount on what they want. It failed.

Remain neutral and incentive driven.

Do not alter your behavior to lick your wounds.

The intense fortified character you demonstrate by complete detachment towards any remarks, puts you entirely in control of your counterpart whether you realize it or not.

Practice.

How to speak: Thread #2

Corporate perspective.

Pretend everything is on record. You do yourself a favor when you watch every word you say.

Manage expectations with your words.

Don't over promise.

No committal statements.

DO NOT MISLEAD.

Dont use I or ME.

Put a distance between you and the conversation. Make them believe you're not the sole decider.

Gives you an out.

Apply emotions. Always.

If they think you're being an unfair prick, vocalize it and assure them that you're not. Prevents build up of hate.

YOU ARE NEVER OFF-RECORD.

Unless you're hanging out with close associates between closed doors. Listen more than talking.

Resist the urge to talk about yourself.

Seek leverage.

Ask what their philosophy around the topic of discussion is. Ask about their belief. Then affirm it to be the same as yours.

Never be first to instigate detailed conversations. It just shows that you are more interested than they are.

Maintain low resolution discussion until they signal otherwise.

If you're facing a take it or leave it offer, never show weakness. It will be used against you.

If you are proposing the take it or leave it offer, always show emotions. It reduces animosity.

Maintain a semi-victim position when you have disproportionate power

Ascension: Thread #3

If you want to get ahead, your private life must itself from your public life, in all aspects of who you are.

Your intolerance towards others is what preserves your values and integrity.

But it's also your intolerance that ruins your popularity.

To speak your mind and convey the beliefs you uphold is always a tactical error, for most people will not share your values, and so they'll secretly despise you.

You must remain intolerant, but not exhibit your intolerance to others.

You have to seek to buy your popularity, at the cost of manipulating your beliefs to what best fits your surrounding.

The more you express your intolerance and high standards, the less popularity you will accrue, at scale.

The cost of not being popular among your surrounding, is the loss in opportunity to leverage word of mouth, and by extension, a credible reputation.

Your beliefs, your philosophy, your principles, must therefore differ publicly, to what they are privately.

I would not be who I am with you on here, if I was not anonymous.

I am not who I am outside my home.

I become what best satisfies others.

So I can bend them to what best satisfies my needs.

Your values, beliefs and philosophy in life, must remain flexible to change outside your home.

Conveying your values to others does not matter.

Charming others with values that appeal to them does.

Very few in your life, will earn the right to be exposed to your true values and beliefs.

Family & blood.

Play the game with the rest.

Reasons why you're not moving up the dominance hierarchy (in no particular order): thread #4

1. You lack competence.
2. You're not good at anything significant enough for society (the people within your sphere of influence) to benefit from.
3. A good metric to use is "how many people are reliant on you?" If you died now, how many people would suffer as a result?

4. No one respects you. Either because you're behind on character development, or, relating back to above, you're incompetent.
5. You're too agreeable.
6. You simply fail at negotiating for what's in your best interest.
7. You can be competent, and still be agreeable,
8. AND STILL fail to move up.
9. You're eyeing a position that's occupied by someone who's either;
  - very competent
  - has leverage on others
  - is very cunning
  - or has strong connections

Unless you're superior in atleast 3 out of 4 of those points, you will fail at challenging them. Pick another position. You have no leverage.

10. You have no degree, no legitimate side startup, no contacts or connections.
11. You have nothing of value that can be leveraged for positional ascension.
12. You say what you think. As much as I resent not speaking the truth, saying what you think, will almost always cause more damage than good to you. You either get this or you don't.
13. You compromise with compassion. Being compassionate during negotiations will always put you in a worse off position.
  - Leave compassion at the door.
  - Take as much as you can.
  - Win
  - Then you have an obligation to give back compassion.
14. You allow people to undermine your power.

Key fundamentals of power;

- Money/Wealth
- Connections
- Influence

Everyone has a degree of power.

Very few continue to build it.

Many let it erode.

15. You lack reciprocity If you're not honourable to bargain with, you will be identified as 'bad for business.'
16. You don't spend your time wisely. Do one of two things if you want to dramatically improve; Come home after work and either; work on a side project. Or find ways to become exceptional in your current job. Do it everyday. You won't recognise yourself in a years time.
17. You are driven by incentives. You only perform when there's a reward. You're the type that will always suffer against those who; perform just out of joy to destroy everyone.

Remember; Children work for reward. Men work to outcompete other men.

18. You probably live a good life handed to you by parents. If this is you, you've been given a curse that's extremely hard to break out of. But clearly you acknowledge this curse if you're reading this thread. My advice; Generate self-reliance.
19. Dominance hierarchy has nothing to do with how you behave with women. And everything to do with how much power you hold within your potential immediate sphere of influence. The bigger the radius of that sphere, the higher you go up the hierarchy.

20. You love get rich quick strategies. A good recent marker; whoever got significantly burnt by the crypto crash, is not your archetypal dominance hierarchy climber.

21. Your CV is a collection of:

- how many countries you've travelled to
- how many hobbies you have
- how "out going", "social" and friendly your demeanour is there's more, but i need to get to work.

22. "You have low Energy levels; incapable of doing rigorous work for long hours."

Stop reacting & start responding: Thread #5

Here's how you speak slowly. (Shadow Integration method.)

One quality that separates a man from children is how he responds to interactions.

Any time someone interacts with you, you have two choices; you can either react, or you can respond.

A response is a thought out reply.

A reaction is emotional.

A reaction is urge driven. Its when you instantly reply without thinking.

Its very easy to identify those who are impulsive simply by looking at this trait.

Its a trait that frames you to be weak through several subliminal effects.

If you react, you communicate that you have no urge control and that you act on emotions.

This assumes you to be unreliable & not dependable.

Whether you like it or not, high-end professional people will notice these small details in your behaviour.

A dead give away of a reactive man is when he talks fast.

Talking fast shows that you don't think & operate on other people's time while not respecting your own.

It also makes the credibility of your dialogue shaky at best.

Because it indicates no thought was provided.

If you want to thoughtfully respond, you need to speak slower.

Using the shadow integration method, it's easy to identify the trigger point of the urge that seeks to react instantly, preventing YOU from responding effectively.

Trigger: every time you interact with someone.

If you have an office job, you could interact with 20 people a day.

If retail, it could be in the 100's.

Every single one of these interactions are trigger points for your 'reactive' urge to manifest.

Every encounter is an opportunity to slow this reactive urge.

Begin at the start of the day with the first person you interact with; pause for 3 seconds before responding.

Don't worry about thinking what to say. Make the pause a habit first.

Count the people you successfully pause with in the day & write it down.

The aim is to pause with every single person you encounter every day.

Every time you successfully pause in a interaction, you weaken the 'reactive' urge and slowly set the foundation to respond thoughtfully.

The void the pause creates, will provoke thoughts by default.

Keep count & do this for a month, and you will see a difference in your ability to respond, over your urge to react.

I have used this method myself and taught it to several others at work who now talk slower and regularly respond with their best thought out opinions.

When you've reached a stage where you involuntarily pause before speaking, and involuntarily think about what the other person said before replying, your 'reactive' urge has then successfully been integrated in your behaviour. You will have full control over its manifestation.

How people frame you will begin to change. They will take your opinion seriously, operate on YOUR time & you'll control the tempo of the interaction, which adds to your credibility, dominance & leadership.
